

Case study

1

What will you say if a classmate invites you to their house after school today in order to show you their new computer game and then play with it? You want to go there very much. You'd also hate to decline the invitation because your friend is so happy about their new game and you worry that declining the invitation might affect your friendship. But on the other hand, you've promised your mum that you'll be home on time, do your homework quickly and help her with the house chores.

What will you tell your classmate?

2

A friend of yours suggests going to the cinema. You think that the film they want to see is boring and you don't like the idea at all, it even annoys you, because there are more interesting films to see and more interesting things you can do together.

What will you tell your classmate?

3

Annie is your friend and she asks you to copy your homework because she hasn't managed to do it. If you let Annie copy your homework, however, the teacher might think that you've copied Annie's homework instead. Annie says that if you don't let her do it, she'll no longer be your friend. What will you do?

4

You've shared something very important with your friend Julia. You tell her it's a secret. Julia, however, tells your secret to two other girls from your class. You become aware of this and you get really angry. What will you tell Julia?

5

You've got an appointment with Robert to work together on a school project which is assigned as homework to both of you. Robert is late. You've been waiting for him outside for 15 minutes and you're getting quite nervous because you're feeling bored and you don't have much time to do the project. Robert shows up, happy and smiling, as though he's not being late, and starts telling you about his new mobile which has got load of features and he's been enjoying himself watching videos and testing its apps. What will you tell Robert?